The luxurious plans and furnishings are not the only details that make this hotel special. Much emphasis on community involvement...

Even though The Ivy hotel isn't set to open until April 2014, we here at DClife were lucky enough to get a sneak peek at the luxurious hotel. The property, which is owned by philanthropists Sylvia and Eddie Brown, is located in the Mt. Vernon district of Baltimore and is the former Inn at Government House. World class hotel expert, David Garrett, and developer, Martin Azola, are the two leads on the project and have a whole lot in store for the look and feel of the hotel. The 35,000 square ft. hotel will feature 18 guest rooms along with a music room, tea room, breakfast room, garden and spa. The entirety of the hotel will be private with the exception of the restaurant which will be open to the public. The restaurant will have a private entrance for the hotel guests and will include a wine room and a menu that centers around American oriented cuisine to be prepared by a world class chef.

The plans look amazing and the location is prime. There is also a lot of buzz and excitement over what The Ivy hotel will do for the community and city of Baltimore. We can't wait to see the final product!
